VW Touran: back health for driver and passenger

VW's first medium-sized car with AGR-certified passenger seat

According to information provided by Volkswagen AG

Modern technology makes everyday life easier - and less commonplace. The new Touran offers more than 50 innovations for more driving pleasure and for making life easier. After all, safety, comfort and easy use are written large in the Touran. The special ergonomic feature: driver and passenger seat have received the AGR seal of approval.

The global launch of the Touran took place already back in March, with vehicles becoming available from September 2015. The car has been completely redesigned and is the first van to be produced on the basis of VW's MQB (modular transverse matrix), with numerous advantages in terms of design and concept, such as a noticeably long wheelbase and very short body overhangs, resulting in ground-breaking achievements in terms of space utilisation. The new model offers a far larger, multi-variable interior; it has been perfected all-round and comes with a choice between six impressive new economical engines together with a comprehensive range of assist and infotainment systems.

As already with the Phaeton, the Passat and the Golf models, the new VW Touran is now also equipped with an AGR-certified driver's seat. But VW is also going one step further: the Touran is the first car in the medium class segment to offer the ergoActiv seat for the passenger as well. The seats provide individual possible settings and adjustments, along the lines of adapting the seat to the user, not vice versa. Seat tilt adjustment, 4-way lordosis support, adequate side guidance elements for the backrest and seat surface, height adjustment, extended seat length and an adjustable headrest are just some of the important requirement criteria for ergonomic sitting comfort. In this way, the ergoActiv seat can be adjusted individually to all possible body sizes.
